WE ARE NOT SUCKERS!

By now, you have learned of the Supreme Court's ruling in Janus v. American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees Council 31, et al. (Click here)

The heavily anticipated 5 - 4 ruling reversed over 40 years of legal precedence (Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Ed., 431 U.S. 209, 1977) and strikes down laws in California, New York, and 20 other states plus the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico, which held that employees who are represented by a union should pay their fair share of fees to support the union that represents them in collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance adjustment. The Abood case, in a unanimous decision from the Supreme Court, affirmed that because the "designation of a union as exclusive representatives carries with it great responsibilities, it inevitably also entails substantial costs."

Justice Elena Kagan offers a brilliant synopsis in her dissenting opinion in the Janus case, calling out the five opposing jurists as "Black robed rulers overriding citizens' choices," and explains how the ruling effectively guts Abood. "The task of negotiating and administering a collective-bargaining agreement and representing the interests of employees in settling disputes and processing grievances are continuing and difficult ones...Those activities," the Court noted, require the "expenditure of much time and money." And there is no way to confine the union's services to union members alone (and thus to trim costs) because unions must by law fairly represent all employees in a given bargaining unit – union members and nonmembers alike. The Court found it reasonable to "distribute fairly the cost" of collective bargaining "among those who benefit" – that is, all employees in the work unit. In other words, an agency fee provision prevents employees from reaping all the "benefits of union representation" – higher pay, a better retirement plan, and so forth – while leaving it to others to bear the costs. To the Court, the upshot was clear: A government entity could reasonably conclude that such a clause was needed to maintain the kind of exclusive bargaining agreement that would facilitate peaceful and stable labor relations. But the Court also acknowledged the First Amendment interests of dissenting employees and recognized that some workers might oppose positions the union takes in collective bargaining, or even "unionism itself." And still more, it understood that unions often advance "political and ideological views" outside the collective bargaining context – "as when they contribute to political candidates."

This Janus decision, to put it succinctly, strikes down all of the above provisions of Abood and now prevents public-sector unions (teachers, administrators, nurses, fire fighters, city, state, and county workers, to name a few) from collecting fair share fees from the workers they represent who choose not to join the union, which in turn makes it more difficult to negotiate better wages and benefits, and the kind of working conditions that set standards for everyone.

AALA, both a professional association and a union, has done the work of representing and arguing for a better school district with improved working conditions and a bargaining agreement that is supportive of employees, students, and families. So where does this ruling leave the Associated Administrators of Los Angeles? Justice Kagan puts it simply: "With this fair share agreement effectively stricken by the Janus decision, the class of union nonmembers spirals upward." Employees (including those who love the union) realize that they can get the same benefits even if they let their membership expire. And as more and more stop paying dues, those left must take up the financial slack (and therefore, begin to feel like suckers) – so they too quit the union.” And when the vicious cycle finally ends, chances are that the union will lack the resources to effectively perform the responsibilities of an exclusive representative – or, in the worst case, to perform them at all.

Let’s be clear, the Janus case was about defunding unions and favoring corporate interests, but we must avoid spiraling into the “feeling like suckers” syndrome and remain steadfast members of the Associated Administrators of Los Angeles. To our members in good standing, please continue to contribute dues to fund the association just as you are now. Unions remain the most effective vehicle for the power in numbers we need to secure our rights and improve our working conditions. It is beyond essential we stand as united as possible at this pivotal juncture in our country’s history.

Randi Weingarten, President of AFT, says it best, “...More than forty years ago, the court recognized that collective bargaining for teachers and other public sector workers benefits those workers, their employers, and their communities. Union representation, if chosen by a majority, is the glue that holds us together. That wisdom has now been abandoned by the slimmest majority...We will continue fighting, caring, showing up, and voting to make possible what is impossible for individuals acting alone. And we will continue to make the case—in the halls of statehouses and the court of public opinion, at our workplaces and communities, and at the ballot box in November—through organizing, activism, and members recommitting to their union.”

HEALTH BENEFITS FAQ— ARE THOSE SEVERE HEADACHES MIGRAINES?

I have frequent headaches that sometime last for hours or even a day. Could these be migraines?

Here is what’s known about migraine headaches. Migraines are a recurring type of headache. They cause moderate to severe pain that is throbbing or pulsing. The pain is often on one side of your head. Other symptoms may accompany a migraine, such as nausea and weakness, or a sensitivity to light and noises.

How prevalent are migraines and what causes them?

About 12 percent of Americans get migraines. They can affect anyone, even children. You are more likely to get migraines if you are a woman, have a family history of migraines, and/or have other medical conditions such as depression, anxiety, bipolar disorder, sleep disorders, and epilepsy.

Researchers believe that migraine headaches have a genetic cause. Many factors can trigger a migraine, such as stress, anxiety, environmental changes (loud noises, blaring lights, weather changes, etc.), change in personal habits (sleep deprivation, physical overexertion, overuse of medicines), certain foods, and food additives, among others. Many people wake up with a migraine. Some people have migraines at predictable times, such as before menstruation or on weekends following a stressful week of work.

What are the symptoms of migraines?

There are four different phases of migraines. You may not always go through every phase each time you have a migraine.

- Phase 1, Prodrome: This phase starts up to 24 hours before the headache begins. Early signs and symptoms include food cravings, unexplained mood changes, uncontrollable yawning, fluid retention, and increased urination.
- Phase 2, Aura: During this phase, you might see flashing or bright lights or zig-zag lines. You may have muscle weakness or feel like you are being touched or grabbed. An aura can happen just before or during a migraine.
- Phase 3, Headache: A migraine usually starts gradually and then becomes more severe. It typically causes throbbing or pulsing pain, which is often on one side of the head, but sometimes you can have a migraine without a headache.
- Phase 4, Postdrome: Feelings of exhaustion, weakness, and confusion may follow a migraine and can last up to a day.

How are migraines diagnosed?

To make a diagnosis, your health care provider will take your medical history, ask about your symptoms and do a physical and neurological exam. An important part of diagnosing migraines is to rule out other medical conditions which could be causing the symptoms, so you may need to have blood tests, an MRI or CT scan, or other tests.

What treatments are available for migraines?

There is no cure for migraines. Treatment focuses on relieving symptoms and preventing additional attacks. If you have frequent or severe migraines, medication may prevent further attacks. There are different types of medicines to relieve symptoms, which include triptan drugs, ergotamine drugs, and pain relievers. The sooner the medicine is taken, the more effective it is.

Other things that can provide relief include resting with eyes closed in a darkened room and/or placing a cold pack on the forehead. Stress management strategies like exercise, relaxation, and/or biofeedback are also helpful. Certain natural supplements, such as riboflavin (vitamin B2) and coenzyme Q10, may also help prevent migraines.

NEW REQUIREMENT FOR HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETICS COACHES

In response to the death of two students last year, Governor Brown recently signed into law the requirement that high school athletics coaches be trained to recognize the signs of heat-related illness. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, heat illness during practice or competition is the leading cause of death among high school athletes and the National Center for Catastrophic Sport Injury Research reports that 42 high school football players died of exertional heat stroke between 1995 and 2014. And while football receives the most attention, all students participating in any high-intensity, long-duration or repeated same-day sports practices and training activities during the hot weather are at risk. AB 2800 (Chu, D-San Jose) adds heat illness training to the already mandatory first aid, cardiopulmonary resuscitation, and concussion training that coaches must take.

YOUTH HOMELESSNESS – A GROWING PROBLEM

Homelessness among young people is a growing issue in the country. The National Runaway Switchboard estimates that on any given night there are approximately 1.3 million homeless youth living unsupervised (lacking parental, foster, or institutional care) on the streets, in abandoned buildings, with friends, or with strangers. They are at a higher risk for physical abuse, sexual exploitation, mental health disabilities, substance abuse, and death. It is estimated that 5,000 unaccompanied youth die each year as a result of assault, illness, or suicide, according to a report published by the National Conference of State Legislatures. The chart on the next page (courtesy of 1736 Family Crisis Center) cites statistics of California homeless youth.

The most common reasons youth become homeless are family problems (physical and sexual abuse, mental health issues, substance abuse, and parental neglect), economic problems (including lack of affordable housing, parental unemployment, etc.), and transitions from foster care or other public systems. In fact, youth who have been in the foster care system are more likely to become homeless at an earlier age and remain homeless for a longer period of time.

Young people who are homeless or runaways face:

- An increased likelihood of engaging in unprotected sex, having multiple sex partners, and participating in intravenous drug use.
- A greater risk of mental health issues, such as depression, suicide, poor nutrition, and low self-esteem.
- A high probability of exchanging sex for food, clothing, and shelter or dealing drugs.
- Difficulty attending school.

Suggested actions that can be taken to reduce youth homelessness include:

- Early Intervention and Prevention Programs – counseling, family reunification services, and rent assistance.
- Intervention with Already Homeless Youth – educational outreach programs, job training and employment programs, transitional living programs, mental health services, and life skills training.
- Independent Housing Options - group homes, residential treatment, host homes, shared homes, youth shelters, and community-based transitional living programs.
- Enhanced Services for Youth Exiting Juvenile Corrections and Foster Care Programs – according to the report, “Each year, roughly 24,000 youth age out of foster care with little or no financial and housing resources. In addition, there is little attention paid to the housing needs of youth leaving juvenile correction facilities.”
