ALTERNATIVE FACTS

Sadly, national politics seem to be playing out in our own backyard. Proof positive is a recently released report from the L.A. Unified Task Force (formerly headed by now Superintendent Austin Beutner) entitled Hard Choices (click HERE). The report squarely places the blame for the District's lack of achievement and finances at the feet of classroom teachers and frontline managers. The irony of the report is the apparent absolution of District-represented senior leadership and the Board of Education, both past and present. Yet, it is they who make policy and propagate resolution after resolution, ultimately burdening teachers and administrators with bulletins, memoranda, and reference guides by the thousands.

So it is important to highlight and bring front and center the fact that teachers and frontline managers are left with the onerous task of implementing said policies and resolutions. The rank and file in schools, local districts, and central offices can articulate what's working, what's not, the barriers, values, beliefs, and assumptions underlying most every initiative and strategic plan, as well as each reimagination, reiteration, and regurgitation of the organizational structure, leading to a "this too shall pass" mentality. This problem will continue lingering until a culture of trust is cultivated and valued. In the meantime, the path of least resistance to best meet the needs of students is for the rank and file to continue planning and collaborating in parking lots across the city instead of voicing legitimate concerns to leadership, for fear of retaliation and intimidation.

In the interest of wanting to be fair and balanced, the Hard Choices report and UTLA's counter narrative, False Choices (click HERE), are provided for your review. Take a moment to study and peruse both as a discerning reader, and with an eye towards the direction the District may be going full-steam ahead. One possible reaction is that the Hard Choices report too shall pass. Another conclusion is we are headed to the privatization and/or insolvency of the District to reduce the hard-earned salaries and healthcare we have received for serving the students of the Los Angeles Unified School District. Perhaps, as we have seen nationally and in our great city, the time has come to agitate, escalate, and organize ourselves for effort to resist the narratives that are eroding our ability to do what we do best, ensuring safe schools where teaching and learning are occurring every day.

And while you're at it, take a gander at the District's press release celebrating the new Chief of Staff (click HERE). Alongside it is Board Member Schmerelson's assessment of this new hire (click HERE). Given our history, it is difficult to suspend judgment and welcome outsiders with open arms. Case in point, outsiders from two or three administrations ago, came, excoriated us for being unimaginative and uncreative, restructured the District, and saddled us with a multitude of new initiatives. If it is hard to recollect who they are and what they did or did not do, simply ask them. Oh, that is right! They are nowhere to be found as they exited stage left and got the heck out of Dodge when it came time to do the heavy lifting dedicated employees have been doing all along.

Now more than ever, it is important to remain WOKE.

IN ADDITION TO THE THREE R'S, SUCCESS DEMANDS EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONS

Executive functions are a set of skills which researchers have identified as being associated with academic achievement as well as social and career success. These skills—focus, working memory, decision-making, and self-control—are governed by the prefrontal cortex, one of the areas of the brain that sees the most rapid growth in normal child development. Executive functions include the ability to initiate, plan and organize, set goals, solve problems, regulate emotions, and monitor behavior. They also build resiliency and improve a person's sense of self-efficacy. Because these skills play a role in most aspects of life, executive function deficits can hamper a child academically, socially, and emotionally. Certain socioeconomic issues, such as poverty, neglect, and/or family stress, can make it difficult for children to develop these skills and without them, no matter how good their reading or math skills, they will have a harder time in school.

While they are known to exist at an early age, problems with executive functions, now called executive function disorder, often do not become apparent until middle school, when the demands for working independently increase. In addition, studies have found that executive function skills are weakened by chronic, sustained stress and therefore, can cause older children to struggle in school. The experience of trauma can also disrupt executive functioning skills. Children who have experienced prolonged or pronounced stress and adversity, including poverty and trauma, may have more difficulty regulating their thoughts, feelings, and behaviors, which can continue into adulthood. In addition, adolescents who report having experienced trauma, such as maltreatment or exposure to a parent's intimate partner violence, have been found to be less effective than their peers at controlling their attention, regulating their emotions, and planning.

LEAs have been encouraged to work with public health agencies to develop holistic approaches to improve support for children who have been exposed to toxic stress and help build or rebuild their executive functioning abilities. Children with executive function disorder are more disorganized than other kids. They might take an extraordinarily long time to get dressed or become overwhelmed while doing simple chores around the house. Schoolwork can become a nightmare because they regularly lose papers or start weeklong assignments the night before they are due. Learning disorder specialists have devised simple ways to bolster the organizational skills that don't come naturally to a child with poor executive functioning. Some of the tools they teach students and their parents to use are:

- Use checklists: Define the steps necessary to complete tasks. For example, something as simple as the morning routine can be broken down into make your bed, brush your teeth, put books and homework in the backpack, etc.
- Set time limits: Assign a time to each step so children do not get overwhelmed.
- Use a planner or software for keeping track of tasks like homework and other assignments.
- Give the rationale: Experts say that children with weak executive functioning skills need to know why something is important or they will just not bother to do it because it appears too difficult.

HEALTH BENEFITS FAQ—LESSONS LEARNED FROM THE HEATWAVE

Dry, sweltering temperatures with gusty winds scorched Southern California the weekend of July 6, reaching record temperatures between 105 and 116 degrees. Besides fire danger, power outages, and crop failures during a heatwave, heat can adversely affect one's health. To keep your cool during intense heat, meteorologists and health officials urge taking sensible preventive measures.

Did you take these precautions during this heatwave?

- Avoid strenuous activities? Anyone with health conditions should stay in the coolest place available, not necessarily indoors.
- Keep hydrated? Even if not thirsty, did you drink lots of water, nonalcoholic, and decaffeinated beverages? Did you avoid extremely cold liquids to keep from getting cramps?
- Use air conditioning or spent time in air-conditioned locations such as malls and public libraries? Remember these sites and other places should you experience a power failure.
- Avoid turning on electric fans when the room was hotter than 90 degrees? Do you know that dry blowing air will dehydrate you? When hot and dry, use a cool mist humidifier to replenish moisture in the air.
- Take cool showers, baths, or sponge baths? Along with a cooling shower, wearing as little clothing as possible when at home helps keep you cooler.
- Put on sunscreen, wear a wide-brimmed hat, or use an umbrella when going outdoors? Did you wear lightweight, light-colored, and loose-fitting clothing that reflected light and heat?

Did you get any of the symptoms that could lead to heat-related illnesses? Do you know what to do for symptoms of overheating?

- Sunburn – Painful, red, and warm skin; and/or blisters on the skin. If affected, you should stay out of the sun until the sunburn heals. Treat your sunburn with cool cloths or a cool bath and keep sunburned areas moisturized with lotion; avoid breaking blisters.
- Heat Rash – Red clusters of small blisters on the skin, usually on neck, chest, in groin, or in elbow creases. Take care of a heat rash by keeping the rash dry and using baby power to soothe the rash.
- Heat Exhaustion – High body temperature (103°F or higher); fast, strong pulse; headache, hot, red, dry, or damp skin; dizziness, nausea, or confusion; losing consciousness (passing out). Treat heat exhaustion immediately by moving to a cool place, placing cool, wet cloths on your body, and sipping water. Get medical help if you are throwing up or if your symptoms get worse and last longer than one hour.
- Heat Cramps – Heavy sweating during intense exercise, muscle pain, or spasms. Treat heat cramps by stopping your physical activity, moving to a cool place, and sipping water or a sports drink. Get medical help if your cramps last longer than an hour, if you have a heart condition, or are on a low-sodium diet.

With the potential for other heatwaves this summer, AALA encourages everyone to be aware and prepared for the harmful effects of extreme heat.

Rachel Ochoa, a 2018 graduate of the Social Justice Humanitas Academy at Cesar Chavez Learning Academy (Jose Navarro, Principal), is also the recipient of a Gates Scholarship that will cover all of her expenses as she matriculates to Stanford University where she plans to major in international relations. Rachel, whose career goal is to be an international lawyer, is one of only 300 students nationwide to win this scholarship. She joins two other LAUSD recipients from Bell High School who also received this prestigious scholarship.

The Loyola Marymount University Doctoral Program in Educational Leadership for Social Justice is an innovative, three-year course of study that allows students to explore aspects of leadership as they intersect with issues of social justice in classrooms and communities. Ranked among the top graduate schools of education by U.S. News and World Report, LMU's theoretically-grounded and practitioner-focused program prepares superintendents, principals, policymakers, and leaders of higher education, nonprofit, and community organizations to transform educational settings into inclusive and equitable learning environments.

Designed for working professionals, all requirements of the Ed.D. program, including the dissertation, can be completed in three years. Classes are offered on Monday evenings during the fall and spring semesters and on Monday and Thursday evenings during the summer.

Utilizing a small cohort model, students create a community of educators, scholars, and leaders, and are further supported by personalized attention from distinguished faculty who are engaged and connected to the real world of leadership and social justice advocacy in schools and communities. Financial assistance is available to eligible doctoral students through the Loyola Marymount University School of Education.
